COURSE OBJECTIVE:

Ethics is mainly known as the principle of moral conduct that makes distinction between good and bad/evil, right and wrong, virtue and non-virtue. The word ethics is derived from a Greek word 'ethos' meaning character. It is a branch of knowledge that governs right and wrong conducts and behaviors of an individual, profession, group or organization. It is a core of the professional and personal lives of people. Different scholars have defined ethics differently. However, different their definitions might be, ethics is always concerned with morality and right vs wrong and good vs evil. It is applied universally. There is also ethics in professions such as journalism, advertising, education, medicine, etc. Karen L. Rich defines ethics as a systematic approach to understanding, analyzing, and distinguishing matters of right and wrong, good and bad, and admirable and deplorable as they relate to the well-being of and the relationships among sentient beings.

By developing and enhancing critical and 8 creative thinking skills, Environmental Ethics helps foster a new generation of informed consumers, workers, as well as policy or decision makers. The same is true for other issues of discussion. It not only helps students to understand the subject of Philosophy in deeper sense, it would also be effective for them in further study.
